Then why are you using the same terminology as everyone else? As most experts will tell you, it's best to think of your resume, or your Linked In Profile, as some sort of "customer ad" for you and your skills and experience. After all, the goal of the resume is to get an IT recruiter or potential employer interested enough to call for an interview. You only have a few moments to capture the readeras attention. Recruiters typically review hundreds of results in innovative ways, leveraging my skills in a dynamic environment.â Apart from the fact that a line like that says very little about your unique IT skills and abilities, it doesn't make sense to you. does a lot to help you stand out from the competition â because everyone uses the same words to describe themselves. Here are some words you should avoid if you want to make sure your resume doesn't sound like everyone else â and some suggestions for alternatives. Passion Ten-15 years ago, "passion" and in...âl get excited by creating...â Innovative Unless you're actually working in a think-tank that's designed to pursue scientific innovative, 'innovative Unless' a Another word that has become chronically overused, especially when describing skills. Using a more varied language will do a better job of highlighting your results: "Developed a more affordable method of ... â CTMUsed web-based technology to â Created a proprietary system to ... â Dynamics Most people use âynamics in a curriculum/profile context as a sort of short film for that are comfortable with a fast environment, but as many words overused, it can lose its meaning through overuse. Try these instead: High productivity Entrepreneurship High change Brisks Grow Using One of the worst transgressors in the stake, 'use' makes you look too difficult, and if we could delete a word from your resume, 'use' would be. Go for simplicity instead of "use existing resources") "Developed new process..." (instead of "research used to transform existing processes") Extensive 'Extensive', in a resume context, is one of those words that can mean anything. It is not necessary to state that you have 'extended experience' in something if the skills and experience you have listed clearly outline your results. For example: "Manage client services team of 5 people..." (instead of "extended experience with marketing") "Implemented corporate supply chain management system..." (instead of "extended experience with supply chain management") Avoid repetition of adjectives - it can suck excitement directly from your resume, and make it look padded with description rather than made Opta for verbs (managed, conducted, completed) on adjectives (proactive, forward, innovative) Do not use long paragraphs. Describe every job you got in a sentence, so list the results in bullet points. This makes your resume easier, more compelling to read Remember: As with any advertising, resumes are better when they are simple, and they go easy on the jargon.
